Printable dragon craft for lunar new year

2-3 years ago, I was at a craft fair and saw a simple Chinese New Year craft coloring set - one of the dolls for paper. I thought I could make one of those Chinese Snow Seas that can be printed for you. Just three years later, I finally got around to drawing my own free DIY dragon doll that could be printed for you. The Chinese New Year 2021 falls on Friday, February 12, the year of the cow! Dolls for paper are fun to make! First published in 2012 re-published for your convenience and of course you can design your own paper dragon, but if you don't have the time or a large amount of kids to work with (I hope I can do this again with RedTed's class), then these are perfect for you! We made them on a play date - 5 kids - and they all love making these awesome dragon paper dolls! Both young people have lost some coloring patience, but they still love dragons. To be honest, I think you can color them too - or print free prints of colored paper (such as red paper) and stick things? Chinese Animal Zodiac - Year of the Rat 2021 Chinese Zodiac Animals are bulls - you may like these cow DIYs - replaced by brown, black and red and you have a perfect year of bull activity! You can also especially like this simple (free) printing year of Chinese New Year crafts for children: dragon doll paper dragon craft - printing materials paper (even though I used a very light card) - or printing on colored paper to store Yousefleft printers for paper, red paper for body, pen or crayon, tissue paper (optional), lollipop sticks (we use recycled from summer ice bars) With glue and scissors you can also get step by step photo instruction worksheet on my teacher's payroll teacher's account. Perfect for classrooms and play groups! This $2 printable (lesson plan, worksheet and dragon overview) helps support the maintenance of this website by purchasing it! Many thanks! How to make a paper dragon craft for kids We have a way to create a paper dragon step by step video or read the instructions below! When we see the coloring of the sheets being much more reasonable to make the kids excited about the project or to show photos of the finished product (e.g. this post). Update: We went to redstead's class room and changed the order of the craft a little: first cut, folded, assembled and finally painted. So each child can finish the dragon even if they get bored with coloring. We also put tape on a popsicle stick so we didn't have to wait for it to dry. The kids were amazing and did an amazing job! If you need step-by-step photo instructions in worksheet format, you can get photo instructions here. 1) Acceptable chain that can be printed for tinge - there is a double-sided head and it can be folded later. 4 feet - so you can Your dragon with them looks good on both sides. 2) The kids used to color the pen, but we discovered it would soon take ages (Red Ted took about 30 minutes to get over his age and even finish it at bedtime, and he did a great job in terms of detail and patience). So... I recommend the following options: * Pens for kids who love coloring and have patience, crayons for young kids who want to quickly cover large surfaces, *paint experiments( but you can be a bit bumpy) or * print on colored paper and use glitter glue or stickers. 3) When coloring is over, cut the shape. On this occasion chrysanthemms did it, but again, I think if this is in the classroom, they can do it on their own. Of course it isn't neat, but I thought it would look lovely anyway. You can cut off the hair, fold it with your mouth, and then cut off the mouth space, so you can do a tissue paperfire. 4) We used a sheet of A4 paper cut into three identical strips - each strip was one body. And the concerto style that folded it, I have children instructions (folding, flipping, folding, flipping, folding, folding...) I was impressed with how well managed I was. Red Ted wanted an extra long dragon, so he paired the two strips together before folding them. 5) Attach the head, tail, feet and lollipop stick to the body. 6) Cut some tissue paper to add fire (optional, of course). Enjoy! You love our Chinese New Year printing and hope you can go on making diy dragon dolls that are fun and easy! We've found that if you hold two lollipop sticks at right angle in one hand, dragons make a good fan too! Do you like this print? You must: Build Darwell Road per paper to build our Dragon Print (Color PDF or Black and White PDF Color) Scissor Tape 2 Dragon Feather Crepe Paper Streamer Construction Paper You will also love: How to build a pellet drum dragon in the new year of the month: 1. Build a dragon that can print colors or print black and white (click right and save). 2. If applicable, have your children color the dragon. 3. Cut dragon head and dragon tail. 4. Decorate the head and tail with feathers and crepe paper streamers. We just used tape to secure the decorations. 5. Tape the Darwell rod on the back of the dragon's head, and the other tape taped to the back of the tail. 6. Make a dragon body. You can be simple You can also choose to be a little more sophisticated using two colors to make your body: cutting strips of construction paper and simply folding them like an accordion. (Anyone who grew up with dot matrix printers may be familiar with this technology!) First, cut three 1-inch-wide strips from the length of the construction paper. Tape together to create long strips. Do the same with the second structure paper. Place the strips side by side in a V shape. Fold the lower strip upwards. Repeat up and down until you fold the entire . Secure the ends with tape. 8. Tap one end of the body to the dragon's head, and then put the tape on the tail as follows: You're done! Enjoy celebrating the Lunar New Year! Oddly enough, I did this dragon craft last year and never came back to building it. With Chinese New Year just around the corner, I'm here to dig it, polish it and be happy! Dragons are an important symbol in China of strength and fortune. Dragon dancing is done with dolls big and small during the New Year festivities that scare off bad spirits. Use this template to make your own dragon dolls to celebrate Chinese thee! Printable Dragon Paper Craft You may also like this printable Dragon Activity page. How to make a doll craft for this paper This craft is so easy for toddlers to do it - they don't try to color it with a nice schmancy color pencil or of course stay within the line... But while they can definitely handle it, you'll probably need some help to cut out two doll pieces. This craft is best for ages 4-8. Chinese Dragon Paper Doll you will need an additional piece of construction paper to make the accordion folded dragon body, plus to make it into a wooden kebab skewer 'doll', like the picture above. Paper craft for printing----- advertising ----- then simply click on the image above to print the dragon, color, cut it, fold and glue as shown! The head and tail are folded in half and glued together with skewers as a construction paper accordion sandwiched between them. I recommend using a lot of glue for this project, do not use cold glue sticks (hot glue is ok to supervise, of course). Old-fashioned white school glue is the easiest and easiest for all ages.
